ABSTRACT

In recent years, Indonesia has been increasingly faced with the phenomenon of children associated with terrorism groups. These children can be the subject of serious violence, where the impacts can be very dangerous and put their ability to grow and develop. This kind of phenomenon should be a major concern for Indonesia because, Indonesia holds the main responsibility to protect children from various acts of violence. The formulation of the problem in this thesis is "How is the handling of children associated with terrorism crime groups in the STRIVE Juvenile Program in 2021 implemented by the Government of Indonesia and UNODC?". The theory used by the author in the formulation of this thesis is Liberal Institutionalism developed by Robert Keohane and Joseph Nye which is felt to be able to help and explain the cooperative relationship established between Indonesia and UNODC regarding efforts to deal with children associated with terrorism groups. Furthermore, the preparation of this thesis uses a qualitative research approach to provide exploratory explanations to gain an understanding of the reasons, opinions, and motivations underlying the implementation of cooperation between the Government of Indonesia and UNODC in the STRIVE Juvenile Program. Based on the results of the analysis, efforts to deal with children associated with terrorism groups in the STRIVE Juvenile Program in 2021 are to focus on the rehabilitation and reintegration of children based on human rights and advocacy approaches to children, as well as prioritizing the rights of child victims involved with terrorism groups.
